In business circles we have to report an increased bonyancy of feeling and confidence in the agricultural and commercial future of the country, -a natural result of the final settlement of treaty relations on a reciprocal basis, The arrivals from abroad during the week have been-the Am schr C M Ward from Baker's Island and H D M's 88 Fantome from Victoria, both on the 1st; and the Am schr Benanza, owned by Mr J H Black, on the 4th, from Hakodate, Japan, after an absence of five months, during which she has visited Petropsulovsk, Nicholavsk, &c. The prevailing south and west winds have prevented any vessels from leaving port. The N M Slade is awaiting an opportunity to proceed on her royage to San Francisco, with a valuable cargo of domestic produce, mostly sugars, valued at $104,212.86. The steamer City of Sydney will be due from the Colonies on The D C Murray, which sailed hence 40 days ago, may be

MR. EDITOR :- I beg to inquire whether the establishment known as the Hawaiian Treasury is managed with a view to the accommodation of the public, and to subserve the interests of the community generally, or is it run with a total disregard of these objects and merely to please the whims or caprice of officials? Courtesy and a disposition to oblige cost but little, and go a great way in a small community like this; but it is strange how some men manage to have so little of either.

More Effects of the Treaty. - Another sale of property has just been consummated being a half interest in the extensive sheep estate of Mr. Francis Spencer, at Waimea, Hawaii, which we understand has been disposed of to Messrs. W. L Green and G. W. Macfarlane, on private terms, though street rumor places the price at the rate of $50,000 to $60,000. This estate cost the original owner over $100,000, and comprises at least 200,000 acres of land, in fee simple and under leasehold, with 25,-000 of the finest bred sheep on the Island. The runs are capable of carrying an almost unlimited number of sheep, and we believe it is the intention of the of sheep, and we believe it is the intention of the of sheep, and we believe it is the intention of the of sheep and we believe it is the intention of the of sheep. present proprietors to increase their flocks to 100, now unimproved). SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7.

ture-against whose protracted session and waste of time and money so much has been said and written and still more felt-deserves an acknowledgment on the part of the public of Honolulu. Among the items in the Bill of Appropriations we notice one of $25,000 " for water supply, Honolulu," and we hope that the government, with this sum at their disposal, will as soon as practicable go to work at measures for relieving the city from the already existing scarcity of water, and in time by restoring the former forests in the valley give to us again an abundance of water, and so set at rest all apprehensions for the future. The heat, which during the past now approaching, to replant the valley-at least in such places and with such trees as will have the earliest effect upon the water supply.

The necessity of speedily providing a new inter-island steamer to take the place of the well-worn Kilauea, is acknowledged on all sides; and now that the Act "To promote Inter-Island Steam Communication" places the requisite authority in the hands of the government, it is absolutely inseparable from its being well done. authorized to contract for the delivery at this alluded to port of a steamer, within one year from the first RECEIPTS AND EXPENSES STEAMER KILAUEA, OCT. 10, 1870, TO JULY 17, 1875,—230 TRIPS. of January, 1877, at a cost of not more than $100,000. The other portions of the Act are mainly matters of detail, but the gist of the measure is given above, whereby it will be seen that the government is authorized either to con-Lighterage, Kawaihae.... tract with private parties to perform the service for a subsidy, or itself to purchase or contract Washing........................ for the building of a steamer to be run on its own account.

In discussing this question in the past we have advocated the building of the steamer here, on the ground of the benefit that would accrue to our own people by affording employment to mechanics, and to the community at large by lump for the purchase of a steamer abroad; and we see no reason to alter these views, even though the expense of building here should be somewhat larger (as it doubtless would be) than to buy at second hand. In the former case we should know to a certainty what style of vessel we had got, and run no risk of being defrauded by speculators. But we go farther, and maintain that it will be preferable for the interests of the country at large that the steamer, for the present at least, shall be owned and run by the government. A good deal of cheap sentiment has been ventilated of late about the great injustice of government interfering with private enterprise by running the inter-island steam service. The abstract principle is a sound one that, all things being equal, government should never undertake any business or trade that private enterprise can and will do as well and as cheaply for all concerned. But the conditions here have been and still are such, that private enterprise never has yet succeeded in supplying our inter-island steam communication, and will not for some years to come, without government aid. Should the time ever arrive when the travel and trade will be such as to render it profitable for private parties, unaided by a subsidy, to run steamers between these islands, the parties will most assuredly be found to perform the service and reap the harvest. Until then, either the government must maintain the steamer at its own risk, or subsidize private parties to do it, which may be very much the same thing so far as the expense to the treasury is concerned-though we by no means concede that the service need to cost the government the sum of $15,000 per annum over and above receipts. The Act under consideration provides for a subsidy not to exceed that amount, and of course we may understand that nothing less than that amount will be paid, if anything. If we will consider for a moment, it will be seen that whoever obtains the contract provided for by the Act will have a perfect monopoly of the inter-island steam service for a period of at least ten years for under almost any possible or probable changes that might occur in business and trade during ten years, (and ten years, let us remember, is in this latter half of the nineteenth century a long time) no second party could expect to succeed in running an opposition to him who held the subsidy and additional privileges. But on the other hand, if the government owned the steamer, it might at any time take advantage of favorable circumstances, such as a large increase in the inter-island trade, and sell to private parties who, under such improved circumstances, could afford to perform the service without a money subsidy. In illustration of our position that it will be for the interests of the country at large that government should for the present run the steamer rather than that it should be in the hands of private enterprise, we will suppose a very possible case. Mr. X, let us say, is the owner of a tract of land suitable for the cultivation of cane, but | are on a liberal scale, and it will now be the situated in a locality distant from the usual and duty of my Ministers to see that the several stituated in a locality distant from the data and stituated in a locality distant from the data and stituated in a locality distant from the data and sums are spent economically, and so as to secure the greatest possible advantage to the lish a plantation, is desirous of having his ma- Kingdom. chinery, etc., conveyed to the nearest point of I trust that the laws which you have endebarkation by the steamer. The wind has stuck persisthave been a most fortunate circumstance, the ently at South and South-west, and yet the sky few months has been so excessive, is a just cause value of which, at the time, was beyond any for uneasiness when we think of the hundreds of mere considerations of money. In that one instance alone, she was worth more to the country than all the money she has cost the treasury from first to last.

But after all the outery that has been made in some quarters about the extravagant cost of our steamer to the treasury, a statement of her rehoped and expected that this public business will ceipts and expenditures for nearly five years from be done without any further delay than may be October 1, 1870, (including in the latter the cost of a wreck and the repairs incidental to long use The Act provides first-that the Minister of the and old age) which we have procured from an Fifteen Cents; by the dozen, One Dollar Interior may contract with responsible parties to authentic source, goes to show that, but for exmaintain in the service a suitable steamer of not | traordinary outlays, the service would have exless than 500 tons register, for a period not to hibited a profit instead of a loss. > A brief session was held at half-past 10 o'clock, when the Committee on Enrolled bills reported a number that had received the Royal assent, besides several which had been rejected, notably among the latter being the bill to reduce the poll-tax to twenty-five cents. It was too late to make another attempt on this much-debated measure, and so the Hon. Mr. Kaai, its promoter, made a pretty little speech and offered a resolution, which was carried nem. con., thanking His Majesty's Ministers for the courteous manner in which they had comported themselves and their industry and zeal in the discharge of their duties, and expressing the hope that the laws which had been passed would prove to be for the bet interests of the country and people. Nobody seemed to take this resolution at all in a Pikwickian sense, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs returned thanks for his colleagues and himself, expressing the belief that wherein they had differed in opinion from mempers it had been an honest difference on both ides, and trusting that whatever had been said the heat of debate that ought not to have been said would be forgotton. And in conclusion His Excellency politely expressed his regrets that His Majesty's advisers 'had been compelled, by their sense of duty, to recommend the refusal of the executive assent to a good many bills that had been passed by the Assembly. This was certainly all very amiable, and the circle of mutual admirers adjourned to meet again

> Before the latter hour the Hall was comfortably filled with ladies and gentlemen, the King's Ministers, the Nobles and Representatives occupying seats in front of the dais, the ladies of the court on the right and the Diplomatic and Consular corps on the left. The military, under command of Major Gulick and Lieut. Makanui, were drawn up in line in front of the building. At precisely noon, a battery in the Palace yard announced the King's departure from the Palace, and a few minutes thereafter their Majesties the King and Queen and Prince Leleiohoku entered the Hall from the room of the Minister of the Interior and took their positions on the dais, the audience rising as the Royal party entered. After a brief but eloquent prayer by the Rev. H. H. Parker, His Majesty read in a clear and distinct tone, the following speech, proroguing the Legislative Assembly of 1876.

The speaker attempted to create some interest in the schools before the primary, which are known Germany and the states under the name of Kindergarten. He explained how far Pestalozzi's method should be followed in the primary and condary schools and went into the matter of displine, when he came to the conclusion drawn m arguments that corporeal punishment should be forbidden in public as well as in private schools. He then considered the necessity of the establishment of a Normal school, by which a afficient number of trained teachers might be obtained for this Kingdom, and concluded by drawing the attention of parents to see that instruction according to the wants of society and the present state of progress in knowledge should be found in this kingdom. We sincerely hope that this lecture may have some influence in creating or increasing the interest of the public towards this " old yet ever new " subject of education.
